1. Review the site's page titles. Does the site use two part page titles? Are the titles in Standard English form (complete words, spaces between words, etc.) Is the first part of the title the same on all pages? Is the second part unique to each page, and does it adequately identify the page? Is the capitalization, punctuation, and spacing of titles consistent? Below, list the page names of pages with titles that need correction.

The site's page titles are appropriate for high school history students. They are clear and concise. All titles have correct capitalization, punctuation, etc.

2. Check the site's links. Are all links functioning? Do all graphic links include appropriate alternative text? Do all graphic links include a nearby text link that links to the same resource? List the page, link, and problem of any link that needs to be edited.

All links work, except for any embedded documents from Google. Those need to have "permission" granted to the user, or be shared publically.

3. Check the graphics included in this site. Do they all load correctly? Do they all included appropriate alternative text in Standard English convention? List the page, graphic name, and problem of any graphic needing correction.

All graphics load properly. They tie into the theme of the site.

4. Review the documentation on every page of this site. Each page must include the name of the author, the date of last update, an email link, and an appropriate disclaimer. Please list the name of each page with a documentation error and specify the type of error.

Each page includes the disclaimer, author's name, email link, and all other required pieces.

5. Check for general text edits. When developing such a large project, it is easy to make a few spelling, grammatical, or capitalization errors. Help your buddy by identifying any such errors. Remember to include the page name and provide specifics to help them find and correct the error. Also identify any passages which you find at all confusing because of wording.

From what I can see, there are no text edits that need to be revised.

6. Overall site comments. Include any overall suggestions for the site and any suggestions for future development.

The site is great! I wish I taught history so I could use it.
